ABSTRACT

This directory is a result of a 1976 study to identify rape prevention and treatment programs and resources in the United States and Canada. Seven hundred listings are included in this updated version. They include rape crisis centers, community mental health centers, medical facilities, government and police agencies, and individuals. The listings are arranged alphabetically by state and territory, by city and county within each state, followed by Canadian entries. Each entry contains the program title, address, telephone number, and hotline information. Services provided are described in terms of populations served, types of counseling, and other services available including liaison with other service agencies. (JAC)

The National Center for the Prevention of Rape is the focal point for Federal activities related to the problem of sexual assault. Authorized under Public Law 94-63, the Center was established within the National Institute of Mental Health, Department of Health and Human Services (formerly Department of Health, Education, and Welfare), in April 1976.

The Center is authorized to:

- conduct research into the legal, social, and medical aspects of rape;
- encourage research-demonstration efforts to develop, implement, and test models of innovative services and alternative approaches for rape prevention and treatment;
- compile and publish training materials;
- develop and maintain an information base in the area of sexual assault.

An important aspect of the public service function of the Center is its responsibility to disseminate information and to improve communications within the field of sexual assault. The Center develops and distributes information and materials to researchers, the professional community, and the general public. For more information about the program of the Center and for a list of available materials, please contact the:

FOREWORD

In its commitment to promote the prevention and treatment of sexual assault in this country, the National Center for the Prevention and Control of Rape, Department of Health and Human Services, provides a variety of information materials to practitioners and planners in the field and to individuals seeking help for themselves or for family members. This first edition of the National Directory: Rape Prevention and Treatment Resources is one of these information tools. Its nationwide inventory of prevention and treatment services and its listing of related resources will serve as a guide to available services and a goal toward the attainment of more complete care and concern for all citizens who are affected by sexual assault.

Through this Directory, the Center hopes that those who need care or assistance will receive it and that those who are devoted to the provision of rape prevention and treatment services will be able more easily to share and coordinate their skills and knowledge with each other and with those they serve.

Mary Lystad, Ph.D.
Chief
National Center for the Prevention and Control of Rape

PREFACE

In the summer of 1976, the National Center for the Prevention and Control of Rape, Department of Health and Human Services (DHHS), initiated a study to identify rape prevention and treatment programs and resources in the United States and Canada. As a result of that effort, over 900 resources were identified and compiled into regional directories, one for each of the 10 DHHS regions, and published in February 1979.

This study also revealed that funding for the various rape programs and services is derived from many different sources, including community fundraising efforts, State and local law enforcement and criminal justice components, social services or human resources agencies, health agencies, health departments, hospitals, community mental health centers, women's centers, educational institutions, private industry, and various nonprofit organizations such as the YWCA, United Way, American Red Cross, and Planned Parenthood. Sources of Federal funds included the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration of the Department of Justice; the Comprehensive Education and Training Act (CETA), administered by the Department of Labor; the Department of Housing and Urban Development; ACTION; and Title XX funds (Social Security Act Amendment, 1974). These Federal funds are usually administered through local government agencies. For additional information about funding resources, write to the National Center for the Prevention and Control of Rape for a copy of Funding: Public and Private Resources.

The original listings have been updated and refined into the 700 included in this National Directory: Rape Prevention and Treatment Resources. The purpose of the Directory is to provide a focal point for service delivery activities in the field of sexual assault; facilitate networks among concerned agencies and individuals; and serve as a central referral source that can be accessed by anyone in the country. The resources listed comprise a diverse array of groups and individuals. They include rape crisis centers, community mental health centers, medical facilities, women's centers and commissions, YWCAs, police departments, district attorneys' offices, State and local organizations and government agencies, university women's centers, medical and legal associations, and individuals who have expertise in the problems resulting from sexual assault.

The listings are arranged alphabetically by State and territory, by city and county within each city. The Canadian entries follow the last State listing and are arranged alphabetically by Provinces and cities within Provinces. Each entry contains the program title, address, telephone number, and, where available, hotline information. The services provided are described in terms of the populations served, types of counseling available, and other services offered, including training for counselors and other professionals, liaison with other service agencies, community education, childcare, and temporary shelters.

The listings are not intended to be evaluative, nor does inclusion constitute endorsement of any person, program, or resource. The information and descriptions of services were provided by the individual program or resource directors. By facilitating access to this information, the National Center for the Prevention and Control of Rape hopes that more people will be encouraged to develop and implement innovative programs designed to combat the problem of sexual assault and to explore a wide range of funding possibilities.

This Directory represents only a portion of the programs and services in operation. Therefore, the entries will be updated periodically in order to maintain as current a listing as possible. You can help by letting us know you are there. A form at the end of the Directory is provided for corrections or additions and referrals to other programs. Comments on any aspect of this publication are welcome, particularly suggestions for ways in which we can improve its usefulness.

We extend our thanks to you in the field; your cooperation and assistance were crucial in making this Directory possible. We hope that you will continue to keep us informed and direct us to additional resources so that this Directory can become a comprehensive referral and network resource.
